NAPANEE, ONT., CANADA—FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 26th, 1919.

The Coal Question!

Notice to our Customers

The price of coal will advance at the mines at least 50c. per ton at the rate of 10c. per month beginning May 1st next.

Both the United States and Canadian railways, notwithstanding the advanced freight of last year, have not been able to meet running expenses for months past.

The probabilities are that freight rates will be advanced in the near future still higher. Therefore there is no cheap coal in sight.

We urge our customers to lay in their next winter's supply at once before we have to advance prices.

FIRE PREVENTION DAY OCTOBER 9th

Prevent Fires

IN YOUR HOME

By removing all Rubbish and Litter. Have your furnace and stove pipes in proper condition. Properly installed Lightning Rods are more than 99 per cent. efficient.

IN YOUR FACTORY AND SHOP

By removing oily waste and other fire menaces. Prohibit smoking on the premises. Cleanliness, order and forethought are important factors in reducing fire waste. Provide better and more systematic inspection and watchman service and also more efficient fire-fighting equipment.

IN YOUR OFFICE

Do not leave lighted cigars or cigarettes where they may start a fire. Do not throw a lighted match into the waste-paper basket.

IN YOUR SCHOOL

By teaching the children the danger of fire. Before leaving each night see that there can be no overheated stoves or furnace. Teach the children not to play with matches.

IN YOUR CHURCH

Have chimneys properly cleaned out before starting your furnace. Never put on an extra fire except when someone is on hand to attend to it.

GEORGE F. LEWIS, Sec.-Treas.

What the Referendum Committee is Doing.

Endeavor to create a good body of Public Feeling in favor of the Ontario Temperance Act.

The method followed : Constructive.

1. Billboard Advertising.
2. Newspaper Advertising.
3. Posters and Phamplets.
4. Advertising and educating through the mails.
5. Public Meetings.

The cost of advertising, especially in the big dailies, costs a great deal. Fifty thousand dollars will not pay for this one item alone.

So far this has been financed out of private funds, but it will be necessary soon to appeal to the friends of Prohibition for money. This is the one big chance for all those to help, who regard the sancity of the home, the welfare of the youth of our land, and the general happiness of the people as worth preserving.

Please be generous when the canvasser calls.

REFERENDUM COMMITTEE

ONTARIO ELECTIONS ON OCTOBER 20

The Provincial Legislature has been dissolved and Premier Hearst issued a platform for the elections on October 20th. The nominations will be on October 13th.

The Conservative administration has held power since Sir James Whitney became premier February 8th, 1905. On his death, Sir William Hearst became premier, on October 2nd, 1914.

The last provincial general elections was held on June 29th, 1914, resulting : Conservatives, 84 ; Liberals, 25 ; Ind. Liberals, 1 ; Labor, 1.

Since then the government lost bye-elections in West Hamilton, North Perth, Southwest Toronto, (Seat A), Manitoulin, North Huron and North Ontario.

IT PAYS TO PATRONIZE THE HOME TOWN

By E. M. Trowern, secrey Dominion Council, the Retail Merchant's Association of Canada.

The great pivot upon which the affairs of the world swing is individual responsibility. Millions upon millions of tons of literature are being spread throughout the world in all languages, every year, calling attention to the wrongs of society as a whole, but in the final analysis these wrongs can never be entirely righted until every individual in every community takes an individual responsibility upon himself or herself to see that they are rightly. Pure unadulterated selfishness is at the root of all the trouble. Strange as it may seem, no person can do a selfish thing or commit an unfair act without having to pay the price themselves, or, in other words, "there is a price ticket on everything."

Take, for instance, a group of persons who are employed in a manufacturing plant, or in any other institution, who conceive the idea that if they bought certain lines of staple goods in bulk at wholesale prices and divided them up among themselves that they would save money and thereby benefit themselves, or, in other words, they would be adding to their earning power. If the plant or institution in which they were working was located in a prosperous town or village their action would affect the legitimate retail merchants who were endeavoring to serve them in the town, and the result would be that the retail merchants who formerly handled the lines which were purchased by these persons at wholesale prices would cease handling those lines, and, in order to pay their rent and running expenses, they would have to increase the cost of the other lines which they carried and which those employees required. What benefit, therefore, would be gained by transactions of that character. ? If you want to do your fellow citizens, the retail merchants an injustice by interfering with their trade for the purpose of endeavouring to benefit yourself for selfish purposes, you have to pay the price in the end, either in money or in loss of service. This rule applies to every walk of life and you cannot evade it.

The more retail stores we have in the community the better the community will be served. Competition is the most sacred weapon in the world, and it should never be interfered with. Retail merchants open stores in various locations because they believe that they can do business in those locations, or, in other words, they take the individual responsibility and consequently the risk Is this not as it should be ? Would any sane person suggest that the Government should decide as to where and when stores should be opened and as was attempted in Germany ? We think not. The basic foundation upon which every community is built is the action and decision of the individual. They locate where they themselves decide is best for them, and around them others associate, and in this way our community life is built up.

We therefore repeat again that the great pivot upon which the affairs of the world swing is individual responsibility. Each individual in every community is there because, in their opinion, it suits them best, otherwise they would leave and go to some other place.

To build a healthy and prosperous community, as well as a contented community, money must circulate freely. It can only circulate according to the desires of each individual. If the stores were full of goods and no one wanted to purchase them because a large number of persons sent their money out of town, the stores would soon close and be "out at the knees." If those who sent their money out of town to mail order houses owned property in the town, or were employed by the town in any capacity, their property would soon depreciate in value and, as we stated before, they would be "paying the price" for their selfishness, which would again prove that "there is a price ticket on everything." You cannot do a mean trick to anyone without having to pay the price, and this is just as true of every city, town or village.

Twenty-five men sat at a table and it was discovered that they all owed one another ten dollars apiece. The first man handed his neighbor ten dollars and it was passed around, thus paying debts amounting to two hundred and fifty dollars, and the first man received it back again. Let us suppose that money was short in that town, and the first man sent the ten dollar bill away to a mail order house, how long do you think those debts would be outstanding ? The more that money is kept circulating in the home town the better chance everyone has to float his or her services, or their merchandise, and they both mean the same thing in the end. Money is only accumulated industry, and everyone can get some if they only work for it, and the chief thing is to see that it does not get cornered by one or two huge monopolies, who can then control labour.

If Canada had five hundred thousand prospeerous towns she would be immensely better off than if she had only half a dozen large cities. There are no slum sections in the towns. To their credit it can be said that the townspeople look after their poor. No man, woman or child need starve while the townspeople have bread. They know one another better than do the people of large cities, as they are nearer to each other. It has been stated that Canada to-day could accommodate itself to ten million farmers and then have room for many more. Does that not mean much for the towns ? The first question that prospective purchaser of a farm asks is, "how near is it to a town ? Is that not a proper question to ask ? The town is the heart blood of the community ; it is the bright, social spot in the life of every farming district ; it is the one thing that binds the boys and girls to the old home. Kill your town by sending your money away to mail order houses, and you are thrusting the knife into the very heart of Canada. Build up your town by keeping your money in local circulation, and you are building up production and helping the manufacturing industries and making the people more contented and happy, and by spending your money in the home town you are creating better stores, a greater variety of stocks, better service to the community, and you are securing lower prices through having local competition.

Buy in your home town and be a booster for it.

PLEASANT VALLEY

One of the greatest events in Canadian history is to be decided next month and the decision of the people goes for the making or marring of a nation. We have had temperance for three years and can all see the great blessing it has been. We used to see numbers of drunken men but to-day, on account of temperance an inebriate would be a rare sight. Do not be led astray by the notice of the Personal Liberty League in last week's paper. They say they are absolutely opposed to the old license system, and yet they are trying to mislead the people by telling them to vote NO to every question on the ballot. With the number of automobiles run today how could we be safe on any road with whiskey at the wheel ? I hope our people will show their good sense and foresight by coming out to cast their vote for temperance.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Davis spent a day recently at Mr. Ernest Kerr's, Forest Mills.

A baby boy has come to stay with Mr. and Mrs. L. Nicholl.

Mr. Nicholl, of Bowmanville, spent the week-end at Mr. Eslie Smith's.

Mr. and Mrs. Lester Richards and family, and Mrs. B. D. Preston motored from Frankford and spent the day at Mr. Garfield Sills'.

The Temperance Committee met Monday evening at Mr. W. J. Pringle's.

Bad colds are quite prevalent around here.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Elliott, Tweed, spent the week-end at Mr. Milford Dupree's.

Mr. and Mrs. B. Sills and family spent a day recently at Mr. J. G. Sills'.

Off to Serbia.

A strange and unwonted emigration is shortly to take place from the Lake District and fell country of Northwestern England. The Herdwicks, the Cheviots and the Wensleydales, three famous types of mountain sheep, have "got together," and decided that some of their number shall go to Serbia and help to restock the wasted Serbian farms. It is an excellent and far-seeing arrangement. The Herdwicks, the little fell sheep, so familiar to every one who knows the Lake District, have the reputation of being the very hardiest sheep in Britain, and that is saying much. He thrives on the scantiest fare, managing to find all he requires on the barren slate mountains of western Lakeland. And so he will do well on the bleak mountains of Serbia, while the Cheviots will gladly make their own of the foothills, and the Wensleydales will thrive in the rough pasture.

Joshing the Medico.

"And shall I be able to play the piano when my hands heal?" asked the wounded soldier.

"Certainly you will," the doctor said.

"Gee, that's great! I never could before."

Pork Prices to Drop.

WINNIPEG, Sept. 23.—As a result of the Board of Commerce probe here pork prices will decrease fifteen cents a pound immediately, according to a statement made by a local packer.

The authority based his forecast on the belief that the whole pork market would be bearishly affected by reason of revelations about profits and overhead costs of producer, packer and retailer.

Harry Whitla, K.C., Government counsel, announced that vegetable prices will be on trial before the board this week. Mr. Whitla also states that in the absence of H. A. Robson, Commissioner Auld has been empowered to conduct the investigation into all staples as he sees fit.

Boots and clothing prices will be dealt with in the near future, and if it is possible a start on the inquiry into these staples will be made toward the end of this week.

Girl Employes Menaced by Fire.

TORONTO, Sept. 23.—Fire which broke out at the Burlington-Windsor Blanket Co., 787-793 King street west, on Saturday morning, imperilled the lives of 23 girl employes before they finally walked to safety through a passageway in an adjoining building. The damage to the building is estimated at $1,000, to contents, $2,000.

WILL FACE CAILLAUX

French Traitor Has Asked for the Right.

Dramatic Reprieve Came at the Last Moment When the Firing Squad Was Waiting for Pierre Lenoir—Sensational Revelations Expected In His Confession.

PARIS, Sept. 23. — The dramatic escape early Friday morning of Pierre Lenoir from death at the hands of a firing squad in the Vincennes woods was the subject of lively conversations in political circles. Lenoir had been tried with Senator Humbert and other defendants on a charge of having communicated military intelligence to the enemy and was sentenced to death.

The firing squad already had taken its place and preparations were being made to escort Lenoir out to meet death from a volley of the riflemen when the condemned man begged to be confronted with former Premier Caillaux, who is under charges similar to those on which Lenoir was convicted. The execution was suspended and the condemned man remained in his cell.

Nothing has been officially given out concerning the personages who may be affected by Lenoir's death-door accusations, but members of the Chamber of Deputies, in discussing the matter, declared that the Caillaux case was mentioned, and also that the name of Ernest Judet, former owner of the Paris newspaper, L'Eclair, who is under indictment here on a charge of having had dealings with the enemy in the purchase or founding of French newspapers with German capital come up. Judet for a long time has been in Switzerland. The arrest of another member of the Chamber of Deputies and also of a prominent newspaper owner, is said to be expected shortly in connection with Lenoir's statement, and it was even asserted that his revelations might cause a re-opening of the Humbert case.

Lenoir's escape from the waiting executioners was nothing short of miraculous, Capt. Julien declining to postpone the execution, signing the register of the Sante Prison accounting for Lenoir and ordering Lenoir to proceed to enter the waiting automobile which was to convey him to the Vincennes wood and death. M. De Molines, Lenoir's lawyer, nearly had an altercation with Capt. Julien while endeavoring to secure a few minutes' respite for the prisoner in order that he might telephone M. Ignace, Under Secretary of State for Military Justice. Having secured the permission to telephone, M. De Molines secured a reprieve of an hour for the prisoner. M. De Molines then entered an automobile and raced to the home of M. Ignace, who received him in his night clothes at five o'clock in the morning and made the stay of execution of the sentence indefinite.

Meanwhile Lenoir will remain in his cell and await eventualities.

The military justice, a party of lawyers, and a chaplain went to Lenoir's cell at 6.30 o'clock finding the condemned man very calm.

"My father taught me not to fear death," he said, "and I shall die courageously. I love France and never betrayed my country."

Asked if he had any communication to make to the party, Lenoir replied:

"At the moment of death, I repeat what I have always vainly asked—to the confronted with Joseph Caillaux." (Joseph Caillaux, former Premier of France, is now under arrest in a hospital near Paris under charges similar to that upon which Lenoir was convicted.)

Canadian Staff Reorganized.

LONDON, Sept. 23.—Another reorganization of the staff has been carried out by the overseas military forces of Canada, and as a result, after October 1st there will be only 300 officers and men in all services. Sir Edward Kemp authorized this decrease before leaving for Canada. The Canadian Medical Services will have a strength of 20 officers and 28 men.

All the remaining Canadian patients are being turned over to the Imperial hospitals, and the Canadian hospitals closed. The quartermaster-general's staff of this branch will have a strength of 130, and other staffs will be pruned even more drastically.

Canada has the best record for speed of demobilization of all the dominions or Allied nations, said Sir Edward Kemp before his departure. Canada has but a dozen men in France, the rest being in Britain.

FRANK COCHRANE DEAD

Minister in Federal Cabinet Passes Away.

He Took a Prominent Part In the Public Life of Ontario, and Entered the Conservative Cabinet Formed by Sir Robert Borden as Minister of Railways—Has Many Business Interests.

OTTAWA, Sept. 23.—Hon. Frank Cochrane died at 3.30 Monday morning after a lingering illness. Although a man of quiet habits, who rarely spoke in Parliament, Mr. Cochrane was exceedingly popular with the members of Parliament, and their regret because of his death is sincere.

The deceased, who had felt better during the early part of last week, expected to go to New York on Saturday, to consult a specialist, but on that day he took a turn for the worse, and soon became unconscious, sinking rapidly until the end came.

Mr. Cochrane's remains will be taken to Toronto for interment, and the funeral will be from the residence of Mrs. Cochrane's brother.

Mr. Cochrane moved from Provincial to Federal politics in 1911, when an organizing genius was needed in Ontario. His work did much to bring about the defeat of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and when Sir Robert Borden formed his first Cabinet Mr. Cochrane became Minister of Railways.

In 1917 Mr. Cochrane's health was not of the best, and when Sir Robert Borden was forming the Union Government he placed his resignation in the hands of the Prime Minister, in order to make way for a Liberal-Unionist. Sir Robert, however, anxious to retain his ripe judgment and advice, insisted on his remaining in the Cabinet without portfolio. Since then, however, his health failed rapidly, and those who were most intimate with him say that the early death of his favorite son, who had served overseas, hastened his end.

Mr. Cochrane's illness has covered a long period of years, and compelled him to take long rests when he was a member of the Government.

Since his retirement from the Cabinet Mr. Cochrane has been chairman of the Government Railway Board. He was the connecting link between the Government railways and Parliament.

News of his death created a profound impression in official circles when it became known in Toronto at the Parliament Buildings, where he was Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines in the Whitney Government.

The late Canadian statesman was born in Clarenceville, Quebec, 67 years ago. Forty years ago he was entrusted with an important mission by the Hudson Bay factor in Northern Ontario, which necessitated traveling thirty miles in midwinter, and during two days and two night of which he was engaged in a running fight with wolves. He accumulated an extensive first-hand knowledge of the forests and mines, which led to his appointment in 1905 by Sir James Whitney as Minister of Lands, Forests, and Mines. Later he was elected to represent Nipissing in the local Legislature. He was at that time a storekeeper in Sudbury, being engaged in the hardware business.

In 1904 he met with an accident while trying to board a train at Wahnapitae. As he grasped the handrail of the moving car he swung between the cars and slipped to the track, and the wheels passed over his foot and leg. He tightened his hand on the rail, however, and managed to swing himself on to the platform, and the train traveled some distance before he was discovered. The injured man knotted a handkerchief around the injured member and observed with a smile: "Looks as though it was done for; you had better take me to a hospital."

Mr. Cochrane was of Methodist parentage. His widow, who was Miss Alice Dunlap, survives, also a daughter, Miss Edith, of Ottawa, and a son, Wilbur, of Ottawa, who was engaged in business in Sudbury. Another son, Ogden, who was in the Royal Horse Artillery, received an injury while training for his commission in England, and died on January 27 last, and this had considerable effect in hastening the father's death.

TRADE CONGRESS OPENS.

Many Women Among the Eight Hundred Delegates.

HAMILTON, Sept. 23.—Welcomed by Sir William Hearst, Premier of Ontario; Hon. G. D. Robertson, Minister of Labor, and Mayor C. G. Booker, of Hamilton, nearly 800 delegates, representing practically every organized craft in the Dominion, commenced the inaugural session of the 35th annual Trade and Labor Congress of Canada Monday morning.

All delegates agree that the congress just started will be the most important in the history of Canadian organized labor. Matters of vital importance to workingmen throughout the country are on the agenda and discussions on some questions are expected to be protracted. Probably the most important matters on the order paper are the eight-hour day, minimum wages, collective bargaining and the policy of the congress regarding the One Big Union. Questions under consideration at the Industrial Conference in Ottawa will again be taken up by the labor delegates.

Considerable importance is attached to reports which will be presented by P. M. Draper, secretary of the congress, and Gustav Francq, of Montreal, regarding their work overseas.

An interesting feature of this year's convention is the increased number of women delegates. It is expected that nearly 150 will attend the sessions. Ben Tillett, M.P., the prominent British Labor leader, is attending on behalf of the British Trades Union Congress, and the American Federation of Labor is also represented.

PASSIVE RESISTANCE

Deliberate Policy Adopted by Poet d'Annunzio.

He Tells the Soldiers Who Helped Him In His Raid Upon Fiume That They Must Not Show Fight—Gen. Badoglio Gives Rebels Forty-Eight Hours to Get Out.

RROME, Sept. 23.—Gen. Badoglio, chief of staff to Gen. Diaz, who went to Fiume with the object of straightening out the situation brought out by the occupation by d'Annunzio and his troops, sent his chief aide, Col. Sicciliani, to confer with d'Annunzio. The two are close friends and d'Annunzio received Col. Sicciliani in a most cordial manner. He spoke without reticence and expressed himself as firmly convinced that he would succeed in solving the Fiume question according to Italy's aspirations.

D'Annunzio showed numerous messages of congratulation which he received, not only from Italy, but from the Allied countries and the United States.

The Tribuna announces that a person returning from Fiume stated that Gen. Badoglio, in charge of the Italian troops outside Fiume, had granted a delay of 48 hours to officers and soldiers in Fiume to return to Italy. It was added that the population of Fiume had decided to make an unmistakable demonstration of their feelings at the expiration of this ultimatum Saturday. Women and children and men of the civil population were to precede the troops to the armistice line, shielding the troops with their bodies in order to see whether Gen. Badoglio's soldiers would fire on them.

It was added that d'Annunzio had ordered the sentinels on the Jugo-Slav frontier not to make use of their arms, even if the Jugo-Slavs fired on them, saying:

"Allow yourselves to be killed. We are here for this, since our sacrifice may lead to the occupation of all of Dalmatia."

The Tribuna says its informant added that some French and British sailors had remained in Fiume and joined the Italian movement. During Saturday night a score of volunteers succeeded in eluding the vigilance of the police at Ancona, and sailed toward Fiume on board a motor boat, while other volunteers departed in sailing boats for the same destination. In the latter party were 15 officers.

The Trieste correspondent of the Corriere d'Italia, announces that Italian torpedo boat destroyers stopped the steamer formerly known as the Prince Von Hohenlohe, which was carrying 50 volunteers to Fiume for Gabriele d'Annunzio.

A despatch from Trieste says a fleet of airplanes has landed near Fiume and have been placed at the disposition of Capt. d'Annunzio, having flown from one of the Italian aviation camps.

Capt. d'Annunzio, in command of the Italian forces occupying Fiume, is highly indignant because Gen. Gandolio sent an airplane over Fiume, which dropped leaflets inviting the soldiers to return to duty in order to avoid being considered deserters and traitors.

Col. Pratt Leaves Party.

ST. WILLIAM'S, Sept. 23.—By the action of Lieut.-Col. A. C. Pratt, M.P.P., who launched a series of attacks upon the Ontario Government, and who read himself out of the Hearst party during the Conservative convention held at this point on Saturday, a three-cornered fight has been promised the riding of South Norfolk for the coming provincial elections. According to Col. Pratt's own assurances, he will occupy one of these corners, at the head of the independents and the veterans, as his break from the Government was staged in such manner as to carry with it its own appeal to the soldier vote, his declaration being that he broke from the party to carry out his promises to the veterans, more than for any other purpose. The other corners of the political arena will be occupied by Mr. John S. Martin, of Port Dover, a farmer of many years' standing—known as the Wyandotte King of America—who received the unanimous endorsation of the Conservative convention; and by Mr. Joseph Cridland, the U.F.O. nominee. It is understood that the Liberals will not bring out a straight candidate, as Mr. Cridland is known to belong to the old Liberal ranks, and they will be content to let him carry their banner as well as that of the United Farmers.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, Sept. 23.—With 4400 cattle on the market yesterday, the largest percentage of which were of the medium and common class, the market was from 25c to 50c lower, the biggest decline being shown on the heavy steers.

For stockers and feeders, the market was very dull, and only the breedy, good-colored steers were selling to advantage. There is not much change in the price of bulls.

There was a big run of sheep and lambs on the market yesterday, about 5000 in all, but the prices held fairly steady, holding firm at 12½c for the big run of the stuff, probably 909 per cent. of the lambs selling at that price.

The calf market was steady and that is about all that could be said about it. Choice veal selling up to around 21c with an odd one at 21½c.

With 2900 hogs on the market, the price was 17c to the farmer, 17¼c f.o.b., 18¼c fed and watered, and 18½c weighed off.

WINNIPEG LIVE STOCK.

Winnipeg, Sept. 22.—Live stock receipts are 2400 cattle, 182 calves, 137 hogs and 209 sheep.

Butcher steers, $5.75 to $10.50; heifers, $5.50 to $8.50; cows, $4 to $8.50; bulls, $4 to $6; oxen, $4.25 to $8.50; calves, $5 to $10; stockers, $5 to $10; feeders, $5.50 to $9.50; sheep, $6 to $9; lambs, $9 to $12; hogs, $17; heavies, $14 to $15; sows, $11 to $13; stags, $7.50 to $9.50.

EAST BUFFALO LIVE STOCK.

East Buffalo, N.Y., Sept. 22.—Cattle—Receipts, 4,600; common 25c to 50c lower. Prime steers, $16.50 to $17; shipping steers, $15.50 to $16.25; butchers, $9 to $15.50; yearlings, $14 to $17.75; heifers, $100 to $125; cows, $1.50; bulls, $6 to $10; stockers and feeders, $6 to $10.50; fresh cows and springers, $65 to $170.

Calves—Receipts, 1,300; slow, 15c lower, $21 to $22.50.

Hogs — Receipts, 10,400; 25c lower. Heavy, $17.25 to $17.50; mixed yorkers, light do. and pigs, $18; roughs, $14.50 to $14.75; stags, $10 to $12.50.

Sheep and lambs — Receipts, 8,000; lambs, 50c higher. Lambs, $8 to $16; yearlings, $7 to $10; wethers, $8.50 to $9; ewes, $3 to $7.50; mixed sheep, $8 to $8.50.

Another Boat Launched.

QUEBEC, Sept. 23.—The ninth steamer built at the Three Rivers shipyards, and named "C-9," was launched without a hitch on Saturday.

Mrs. Tessier, wife of Hon. J. A. Tessier, Provincial Minister of Highways, and also mayor of Three Rivers, sprayed the new ship's bows with the traditional bottle of champagne. This shipbuilding firm has another steamer to build, the tenth of this kind, while it has just obtained a contract from a navigation company in France for four large steel vessels.

Seeking Credit In Argentina.

BUENOS AIRES, Sept. 23.—The Government has been asked to grant a credit of $100,000,000 gold to Germany in order to facilitate the purchase of raw materials in Argentina. The credit will be similar to that granted the Entente powers last year, except that Germany offers to provide security.

BACK TO THE LAND.

What the Government Does for the Soldier Settler.

Some idea as to the extent of help the Government is offering returned soldiers settling on the land is given in a recent statement by the Soldiers' Settlement Board, Ottawa. The Government supervises every dollar spent of the loan made to the men.

Certain rules are followed regarding purchases that may be made. For instance, the Soldiers' Settlement Board has determined that a man shall not be permitted to purchase a tractor, as that phase of farming is based upon a shift of operations that is beyond the capacity of a man starting as a pioneer. That is something which he could reach later on. Indeed in a permitted any infraction of that rule the Government would be engaged upon payment and coaching men upon work that perhaps they could not cope with.

Limits are also placed upon the price that may be paid for horses. The board succeeded in effecting arrangements with the producers of all the goods that the soldier will require and would pay for out of his own money, which is a great advantage to soldier settlers.

In the first place arrangements have been effected with all the principal manufacturers of agricultural implements, whereby the manufacturers make their organization for the delivery of implements as the soldier may choose, and they get them to the soldier at the wholesale factory price. In addition to that the manufacturers pay the cost of distribution, paying their agents a special commission for handling the implements. The soldier pays nothing except the ordinary bulk freight rate.

Regarding harness, a still better arrangement has been made. The general saving which the settler makes on harness amounts to 30 per cent. of the retail price. It is even less than the wholesale price. Payment is made through the board. Owing to the fact that there were considerable stocks of harness on hand an especially advantageous arrangement was made.

The wholesale price is secured for the soldier for his hardware. He can get it where he likes, paying the wholesale cash price. The settler pays the wholesale cash price also for his lumber. They do not generally buy in less than carloads, in which case they get the mill price. The same arrangements have been effected as to the other commodities. The total he saves as a result is a most substantial sum.

Bolts From the Blue.

Meteorites of indicated great age are conspicuous by their absence from museum collections, and it is suggested that such specimens may disintegrate and disappear from the rocks within a relatively short time after falling.

The British Museum, however, has lately acquired a slice of somewhat less than a pound from a meteoric iron that is believed to represent an ancient fall. The slice is from one of two similar masses that were found in January, 1905, within a few miles of Dawson, Klondike, and that, from their position deep in the oldest gravels of the district, are thought to have rested there since the Pliocene age or before.

From his study of the original specimens in the Museum, of the Geological Survey at Ottawa, R. A. A. Johnson has concluded that they are part of a single meteoric shower of Tertiary time.

Musk.

To the list of sources of musk must be added a kind of gnat, which is so common in the Australian bush at times as to fill the air with a musky odor.

Those Who Fought

Endorse the Citizens' Liberty League

The Citizens' Liberty League is proud to state that the following Organizations of Veterans have signified their approval of the League's objects and are supporting it in the endeavour to obtain sane, moderate temperance legislation.

Great War Veterans' Association—Toronto Branches:
Parkdale Central Riverdale West Toronto Earlscourt,
The Grand Army of Canada. His Majesty's Army and Navy Veterans' Association. The Naval Veterans' Association,
75th Battalion Association. 75th Battalion Officers' Association,
The Originals' Club. 83rd Battalion Association.

These great Organizations of men who were the first to answer the call in the fight for liberty are endorsing the platform of the Citizens' Liberty League because they know, with the League, that the Ontario Temperance Act unduly restricts the liberties of the citizens of the Province.

These men ask,—and what men in the Province have such a right to ask?—that you vote "YES" on questions two and three on the Referendum Ballot—and so assure to the citizens a beer containing 2.51 per cent. alcohol by weight, absolutely non-intoxicating—the Beer of the Ballot.

Vote "YES" on all Four Questions

Remember, every voter must vote on every question or his ballot will be spoiled.

J. J. Astor's First Wife
Now Lady Ribblesdale.
Has Had Romantic Career

WITH the marriage of Mrs. Astor to Lord Ribblesdale, the curtain now goes up on the fourth act of a striking life drama, in which a woman, long accounted the most beautiful New Yorker, arrives at the greatest social heights.

Lady Ribblesdale's first husband was John Jacob Astor, one of the richest men in the world. Her wealth, beauty and distinction finally made her not only a leader of New York's four hundred, but in London society as well, with King Edward as guest at more than one of her entertainments.

There was a momentary darkening of the social skies when Queen Mary showed her disapproval of the Astor divorce, but that was perhaps little more unpleasant for the circumstances. At all events, Mrs. Astor has now crowned her social achievements by wedding a man who has much to offer her besides a title and a leading position in English society.

From her early childhood in one of the most cultivated homes of Philadelphia, Ava Willing's extraordinary beauty attracted interested attention. She grew up in an atmosphere of devotion and homage.

And when John Jacob Astor began to look about for a wife, it followed the custom of the men of his family. He selected the most beautiful and distinguished girl he could find—the daughter of Edward S. Willing of Philadelphia, connoisseur in old wines and descendant of an old and proud Quaker family.

It is still the first act of the drama we glimpse through the eyes of a Kansas City woman, who was taken to a luncheon back in 1890 in Philadelphia. At her side sat Ava Willing, then a girl of twenty.

"She was the loveliest creature I ever had seen," the Kansas City woman said. "It was more than merely that her features were regular, her coloring rich and harmonious. It was rather the regal way she carried herself, and the way her head was set on her shoulders. I cannot describe it adequately, but at all events her appearance gave me a new standard of feminine beauty.

"I saw her three years later at the Chicago World's Fair, and the change in her face was pathetic. She was in a wheel chair and her husband was walking beside her. But Mrs. Astor looked anything but happy. She was still lovely, of course, but the warm interest in life that had done so much to enhance her face was gone. She looked inexpressibly sad and forlorn. It occurred to me then that millions hadn't meant much to Ava Willing."

It was not surprising that some of Miss Willing's Philadelphia friends should look upon her marriage to young Astor as somewhat in the nature of a mesalliance, in spite of his princely fortune and the fact that his bride would have an opportunity to succeed his mother as leader of New York's social life.

What Ava Willing thought may perhaps be read between the lines of her confidential gossips said John Jacob Astor—Col. "Jack" he became after the Spanish-American War—was inclined to be parsimonious where his wife was concerned, however freely he spent money on others. They had it that the lovely bride was not indulged in a single whim from the Southern hotel where they stayed on their honeymoon but that she was obliged to wait the length of the week for a bath at the end of the hall.

However, she accepted her role, and in an incredibly short time was the acknowledged leader in the fashionable leader, with her famous mother-in-law as chief.

After the season, Vincent went to school the younger Mrs. Astor took her little daughter, Alice Muriel, now 17 years old, and went more than once for a summer or winter in England.

Sometimes her husband went with them, but not always, and finally there came a summer when he left them in Europe and came to America, and his son put to school and went sailing with him on the yacht Nourmahal for parts unknown.

It was said he didn't wish Vincent to be humiliated by the announcement he knew was coming. Three days after they departed, Mrs. Astor arrived in New York and the suit for divorce was immediately brought.

After the separation, Mrs. Astor went back to Philadelphia, taking her little daughter, Alice Muriel, with her, and leaving the son, Vincent, then 17 years old, to the care of his father, who sent him to school in England.

Mrs. Astor decided to return to the United States, but did not stay long on this side, going to Paris where she took a place to another, then returned to England, taking some great house in Grosvenor Square, only to give it up in a day or a week and take another. She had her private fortune, left by her father, and she received an allowance of one-third as from $50,000 a year to $250,000.

Meanwhile, two pretty young girls were being prepared by a clever mother, so goes the story, for social conquest. She was a mother from whom much can be learned by those who wish to become adepts in such matters. She had decided that her daughters looked better on the tennis courts than anywhere else. She made them learn tennis, and to play the game so well that they could look well while playing it.

It is said she designed that the older one should catch the eye of John Jacob Astor, the tennis loving divorced one. But it was not upon Katherine Force the millionaire's eye fell with favor, but upon her younger sister, Madeleine, who—even then was reported to be engaged to William Dick, who is now her husband.

A yachting party was suggested and Astor told the girls they could invite anyone they chose. Madeline chose William Dick, but he didn't have a very good time. Miss Madeleine was monopolized by the host, and the marriage followed.

When informed of it, Mrs. Ava Willing Astor was in England, but she had not a word to say, nor did she disclose the slightest interest.

She remained in England until the Titanic disaster, in which her former husband was drowned, giving the third act its high note of tragedy. She was invited by her successor to attend the funeral, but did not accept, coming home soon after and adopting the name of Mrs. John Astor. Undoubtedly she could have resumed her social leadership had she so desired, but after the marriage of her son Vincent to Miss Dinsmore Huntingdon, she returned to England, where she was variously reported to be engaged to Lord Curzon, Lord Ravenswood and a titled Austrian much younger than herself.

Lord Ribblesdale has had a popularity in British society by reason of his personal bearing, rank and sporting proclivities, as great as that possessed by the former Mrs. Astor in America. Long known as "the handsomest peer in Parliament," he is an imposing figure and has long been famous in many walks of life.

Lord Ribblesdale during his first matrimonial venture with Charlotte Monckton, daughter of the late Sir Charles Tennant, who died in 1911—was a brother-in-law of Mrs. Asquith.

ENGLAND NEVER DRY,

Will Not Tolerate Prohibition, Says Lady Somerset.

Vigorous views pointing to impracticability of prohibition as a measure to promote temperance in Great Britain are expressed by Lady Henry Somerset, the noted temperance worker of long experience in the United Kingdom. Her opinions are especially pointed as following in her summing up of her position:

"It is because I feel so strongly that reform is needed that I am inveighing so strongly against prohibition," she says. "If prohibition came in it would merely become a question of evading the law, and for the people to acquire that habit would be a bad thing for the country. The campaign for prohibition is not dealing honestly with one of the most solemn questions affecting the whole future of our national life, because everyone who looks seriously at the present conditions knows prohibition to be impossible.

"Government control is what is wanted, not prohibition. If we had Government control there would be no pressing drink on people. Great mischief is done by competition. Government control is the only effective way of stifling competition. With it there would be no such thing as free drinks to the first customer, nor the other inducements to come early and stay late.

"Ever since Lord Peel's minority report I have been against the little influence I have to get the liquor traffic into the hands of the Government. It is the only means of settling the question fairly and preventing mischief which the liquor laws were originally framed to avoid, but have never effectually done. You have always got the question of compensation. Is it not better to spend the money in buying the traffic right out?"

Lady Henry Somerset argues that the question of prohibition is different in America, for there the people are moulded by the opinions of the moment.

"Prohibition," she says, "may do for America; it certainly will not do for England. If it is attempted there will be a tremendous rebound. There will be a revolt. But I am convinced that such a measure is an impossibility. The whole campaign is a farce. I am certain that this country would never tolerate the prohibition.

"If is no use arguing by analogy from the United States. Prohibition in the United States is a totally different matter. It is a different country, with different traditions and entirely different social distincts. I know, because I know the country well.

"It would be impossible to enforce prohibition upon the people of England," says Lady Henry Somerset. "It is a distinct infringement upon the rights of the people. This country, at any rate, will not have it. It is impossible to imagine it coming into force. If it did so by chance, it would be rescinded. Public opinion would be too strong against it."

Arguing that the only support the measure may get in Britain is that of a section of the Church, Nonconformist churches in a measure, and extreme teetotallers of the temperance party, Lady Somerset admits the risk that every word she uses may be taken as support for the liquor traffic, which she abominates.

"For thirty years," she says, "I have been working in the temperance cause, with the sole idea of getting a sober England. I am convinced that to force prohibition now means that all the work of those years will be undone, and that we should achieve a barren nothing. The campaign sets public opinion dead against temperance, real temperance."

IN MISERY FOR YEARS

Mrs. Courtney Tells How She Was Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Oskaloosa, Iowa.—"For years I was simply in misery from a weakness and awful pains—and nothing seemed to do me any good. A friend advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and got relief right away. I can certainly recommend this valuable medicine to other women who suffer, for it has done such good work for me and I know it will help others if they will give it a fair trial."—Mrs. Lizzie Courtney, 108 8th Ave., West, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

Why will women drag along from day to day, year in and year out, suffering such misery as did Mrs. Courtney, when such letters as this are continually being published. Every woman who suffers from displacements, irregularities, inflammation, ulceration, backache, nervousness, or who is passing through the Change of Life should at once give root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a trial. For special advice write to Mrs. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of its long experience is at your service.

A TEMPERANCE FANATIC

W. C. T. U.

If temperance fanatics are to be found they are the legitimate product of the liquor traffic. On the threshold of a temperance vote in Ontario, electors need to pause and weigh well the words of Lieut.-Col. John Pringle, D. D., Moderator of the general Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, when he said: "I was a temperance fanatic before I went overseas; I am now ten times the temperance fanatic I was since coming back.

There is a powerful cause for this tenfold increase in what Dr. Pringle—accepting the taunting charge of liquordom—calls fanaticism. What he has seen in his recent experiences confirms him in his convictions that prohibition pays in every respect.

Going Hunting?

Get your ammunition at WILSON'S Hardware Store.

Our politicians are dancing in jazz time. Premier Hearst hears so many noises that he can't say whether to bow to the country, to hold back, or to seek a haven of repose. McGarry will be there with dancing pumps and a shillelagh. Hartley Dewart is going from dance hall to dance hall mixing with farmers and workers And there must be 2,000,000 ladies of the province, each "with rings on their fingers, bells on their toes," are all aglow to get into the mad whirl of their first election waltz. And how will they dance! But the O. F. U., the gentle shepherds, and the jolly plowboys, are to be the liveliest quick steppers, jig dancers, and swing around the circle partners in the political quadrille that the orchestra and floor manager may start afoot. It will be the greatest ball ever held in Ontario. But the ladies are all ready with their "Will you, won't you join me in the dance.—Toronto World.

WOULDN'T TAKE A FORTUNE FOR IT

All her friends come to see what Tanlac did for Mrs. Lynch.

"I wouldn't take a fortune for the good that Tanlac has done for me," said Mrs. F. A. Lynch, of 164 Central street, Galesburg, Ill., recently.

"I suffered from stomach trouble for about five years," she continued, "and hadn't been able to eat a regular meal for several years and uring this time I suffered awfully with cramps, dizzy spells, and terrible throbbing headaches. I was often troubled with gas on my stomach that bloated me up so I could hardly breathe. I also suffered with my kidneys and was so constipated that my condition alarmed me at times, for I just didn't seem to get any relief from this trouble. I was never free from a dull, aching pain across the small of my back and got so weak and rundown that I was laid up for as much as a week at a time.

"Tanlac has done me a wonderful amount of good. I eat three meals a day now and am never troubled with indigestion, bloating or headaches. My kidneys don't worry me and I am not constipated now. My condition has improved so I can do all my housework. I am perfectly well in every way and people who have heard about my recovery come to see if all they hear is true, and it don't take me long to convince them of the facts."

Tanlac is sold in Napane at WALLACE'S Drug Store, in Camden East by R. J. OSTER, in Wagarville by S. JACKSON.

The names, in full, of these boys, with the name and address of the next of kin are requested to be sent proptly to Mrs. George A. Thompson, Secretary, as the list must be forwarded to Toronto by October 13th. 43b

At Home

A most delightful "At Home" was given by the On-We-Gilde orchestra on Thursday evening, September 18th. The town hall was beautifuly decorated, the room adjoining and the stage being transformed into cosy sitting out rooms, with boquets of mums and asters in abundance while numerous Japanese lanterns gave a most charming effect. Supper was served at midnight, the guests lingering to enjoy the excellent music furnished by the orchestra, whose rendering of each number was above criticism. Great credit is due Miss Hattie Wartman, head of the orchestra, and those assisting her, for so delightful an evening.

RIEL RECALLED.

Historic Buildings In Regina Will Be Destroyed.

Extensive new buildings are to be erected on the R.N.W.M.P. square at the headquarters of the famous force in Regina. While Commissioner Perry announced that the buildings would go up in the near future and would entail a large expenditure, he stated that he was not in a position to give many details.

The new buildings, he said, would be placed on the south side of the square. Officers' quarters and a large barracks will be erected. This will entail the tearing down and removal of the last of the old wooden buildings, including the historic guardroom where Louis Reil expiated his crimes on November 16, 1885. The guardroom was the first frame building erected on the ground. The other original buildings were made in Quebec in 1885, sent to Regina in sections, and then put together by men on the force at the rate of one each day.

Senior officers of the Montreal police expressed regret at the passing of the old buildings while delighted with the prospect of the new ones. There is a possibility that the old guardroom building will be removed to another spot and preserved in its present form. One of the officers stood on the scaffold when Riel with all the Stoicism of his race met his death by hanging. Another has a piece of the rope and a card, written by the rebellion leader just before the hour of execution.

From memory one of the officers recalled those on the scaffold. They were: Sheriff Chapleau, Deputy-Sheriff Gibson, Inspector J. A. McGibbon (now assistant commissioner), Hangman Henderson, Father Andre of Duck Lake, Father McWilliams and Riel himself. Telling of the actual hanging, the officer said there were two trap doors, and that Riel stood more on one than the other when the trap was sprung. The result was that when he fell his feet struck Dr. Dukes, the medical officer, who was standing below, in the face. Standing near Dr. Dukes were Dr. Cotton, the coroner, and the jurymen.

The hangman, Henderson, had been taken prisoner by Riel at the first rebellion in 1870 at Fort Garry. Two years after the hanging Henderson was lost in the dead of winter between Regina and Wood Mountain. After several unsuccessful attempts by other parties a party leadby Inspector McGibbon found him on the prairie badly frosen but still alive. He was brought to Regina on a flat sledge.

THE COAL QUESTION.

The Problem Is Largely One of Transportation.

One of the most important points brought out by Mr. C. A. Magrath, the former Canadian Fuel Controller, in his recent report on the activities of his office, down to the time of its abolition, was undoubtedly that which dealt with the question of transportation as a master factor in the Canadian coal problem. "It cannot be impressed upon the Canadian public too strongly," Mr. Magrath declared, "that the coal supply, to the consumers of this country, is primarily a question of transportation."

Now, the ordinary householder in Canada, as in many other countries, has suffered many things at the hands of the coal dealers, and there is no little excuse for him if he suspects that any exercise of foresight on his part will not result in any advantage to himself, but only in an additional profit to the coal dealer. Nevertheless there can be no question that a national understanding, or anything like a national understanding, of the problem of coal distribution in its broad aspects, accompanied by a national determination to act in the matter so as best to facilitate the work would quickly compel a very considerable reduction in prices.

Mr. Magrath insists that the key to the whole situation lies in the question of the proper time for the consumer to place his order for his winter's supply of coal, and those who have any acquaintance with the situation can hardly fail to agree with him. Canada is a peculiarly situated country in this respect. In winter, when coal is most needed, transport facilities are most difficult. Not only are the great waterways of the St. Lawrence frozen, but railway transport is rendered much more uncertain. As a consequence, coal dealers at any distance from the mines, and, as Mr. Magrath points out, very little coal is consumed in Canada within 200 miles of the source of supply, are obliged to lay in enormous stocks during the summer months, at a proportionate outlay of capital, and to do so without being able to form any very clear idea as to how much they may need.

So important does Mr. Magrath consider this question that he advocates, in order to encourage the buying of domestic coal in the spring and the early summer, which is the slack season, a considerable reduction in the price per ton on April 1 of each year, to be followed by a monthly addition until the normal winter price is regained in September. It also considered that it might be possible to work out an arrangement with the railroad managers for a reduction in the rates charged during the summer, or at least a rearrangement of existing tariffs so that there would be a further inducement for buying fuel in the spring and summer, thus assisting the stabilizing of the industry. "For this," he adds, "at once the season of greatest steam efficiency, lowest cost of operation, and least amount of freight traffic." The whole question is very much worth the attention of every citizen. The great lessons of national conservation in many directions, learned in the school of experience during the past five years, should not be lost. Failure to remember them and to profit by them can have but one inevitable result, namely, to place a new tool, or rather to replace an old one, in the hands of the profiteer.

Weird News Items.

The following weird news item appeared in a leading New York paper and indicates why the Americans know so little of the affairs of Canada and the British Empire. The information is so misleading: "According to rumor, some time during the next six months Ireland will be declared a dominion, having for Governor-General Sir Thomas G. Shaughnessy, long identified as president of the Canadian Pacific, the largest transportation system in the world. In spite of his well-known connection with the British Empire, Sir Thomas was born in Milwaukee, Wis., on the 6th of October, 1863, where he spent his youth and received an American public school education. At the age of sixteen he entered the employment of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, and from that time on he adopted railroading as his profession. Noted for his organizing ability in railroad work, he turned this same ability and his special knowledge to good account in service for the British Government during the world war."

THE CRICKET

You will have noticed that "Lumberjack Bill" was in a state of effervescence last week over something of which he, being a lumberjack, is absolutely ignorant. We will answer him by starting in the conventional manner.

Lumberjack Bill, Esq.,

Nowhere; (where you have always been and always will be.)

Cherished Sir,—

Yours of no time just received and contents duly noted.

In reply would say that when we have the chance we will look behind the door in the yacht club mentioned. It may be some time yet though, as we expect to see it as a guest, and not as a biscuit shooter.

Touching briefly on the placing of flags in London Paris and Washington; we have seen all that we want to see of London as much as you have of Paris, and we don't particularly want ever to see Washington. If we had any love for the latter we would not be so fussy about the place their flag occupies.

Your ideas of International law are very hazy, Mr. Lumberjack Bill, even if you are an attorney-at-law! Let us give you a little information on the subject of Embassies. You with your knowledge of the laws no doubt know where to find it. An Embassy always changes the ground which it occupies to the nationality of the country which it represents, and is governed by the laws of its mother country. For example, the British Ambassador in the Paris and Washington that you know so well hold certain premises as their chambers. This piece of ground, although in France or the United States, is British ground, not French or United States, and the Ambassador is not required even out of common decency to fly the flag of France or United States, as the land occupied is British land, a part of the empire. But an Embassy is not a country hotel by any means. At any rate what we were writing about was not a matter of International Law, but of common decency and etiquette. So Mr. Lumberjack Bill before you call anyone cheeky or ignorant, you want to be sure,—very sure of the stand you take, or some day some one will be finding how very lacking in intelligence you are yourself. Anyone flying a foreign flag in Canada is looked to out of common decency to fly a Canadian flag of at least equal dimensions above it. It is not a punishable offence not to do so.

Your idea of flags flying at the same level is more than foolish, old sea lawyer, and perhaps you would have learned this at your favorite yacht club if you had been ON THE OUTSIDE LOOKIN' IN. Perhaps they fly their Monday's washing from the same level on the boughs of the trees in the woods, and you have mistaken the washing for the flags, but washing is about all the cloth that is flown from the same level.

In your next letter it will not be necessary for you to sign the Lumberjack part to your letter, we would have judged that anyway, no other kind of being could have equalled your gall. The next time you had better get the foreman or water boy to help you. The task undertaken was too heavy for you, and the subject far beyond your learning or mental grasp.

And still they foal! There seems to be no remedy for this. The police have failed to do anything. What's the trouble?

What happens when the curfew law is discussed in this town? and when mothers appeal to the town to pass a law to keep the children off the streets at night, "AND TO ENFORCE IT" A curfew law would be a great thing here. One doesn't realize the number of children there are in town till they go down town any time between eight and ten. Motorists are fearful of driving down the main drag lest they run some kid over. Go and watch them playing tag on the road on Dundas street to-night. On account of the great esteem in which we hold the police force of Napanee we refrain from saying what we feel.

Britain to Honor Pilgrims.

Behind the efforts of those who are seeking to link Great Britain and America in a lasting union of friendship two historic episodes stand out in bold relief.

It is almost precisely 300 years since the Pilgrim Fathers set sail from Plymouth in the Mayflower to make, on an undeveloped continent, a brave experiment in self government. The actual tercentenary falls next year, and already preparations are in progress to celebrate the occasion in this country in a fitting manner.

By way of contrast to that great adventure one thinks of that other pilgrimage last year, when two million soldiers left their homes in America to speed across the Atlantic to the assistance of the old country. They came actuated by that love of liberty which had been handed down to them from the ancient Pilgrims, and with their British brothers they testified on the battle field to the essential unity of the Anglo-Saxon stock. It is now for Great Britain and America to determine that the friendship which their gallant soldier cemented with their blood shall be a permanent inspiration in their international relations. —London Daily Telegraph.

TO THE REFERENDUM COMMITTEE

The Ontario Brewers' Association can no longer disregard the attempts of the Ontario Referendum Committee to mislead the people of this Province in the forthcoming Referendum.

In its campaign literature the Referendum Committee has corrupted the statutory ballot as set out below, and its advertising positively asserts that the light beer to be voted on is intoxicating.

The Referendum Committee is either misinformed or is deliberately misguiding the people for a purpose.

The purpose is to make the voters believe that they are voting for or against intoxicating beer.

Examine carefully the two ballots reproduced below.

Government Statutory Ballot Paper	Referendum Committee's Distortion
Question 2.
ARE you in favor of the sale of light beer containing not more than two and fifty-one one hundredths per cent. alcohol weight measure through Government Agencies and amendments to the Ontario Temperance Act to permit such sale?	2. ARE you in favor of the SALE OF INTOXICATING BEER in Government Agencies?
Question 3.
ARE you in favor of the sale of light beer containing not more than two and fifty-one one hundredths per cent. alcohol weight measure in Standard Hotels in local municipalities that by a majority vote favor such sale and amendments to the Ontario Temperance Act to permit such sale?	3. ARE you in favor of the SALE OF INTOXICATING BEER in Standard Hotels?
Question 4.
ARE you in favor of the sale of spirituous and malt liquors through Government Agencies and amendments to the Ontario Temperance Act to permit such sale?	4. ARE you in favor of the sale of all kinds of spirituous and malt liquor in Government Agencies?

The Government Ballot clearly shows that the public is only to vote for or against the sale of beer containing not more than 2.51 per cent. alcohol by weight.

BEER CONTAINING 2.51 PER CENT. ALCOHOL BY WEIGHT IS NON-INTOXICATING

To establish that the 2.51 per cent. beer to be voted on is not intoxicating, the Ontario Brewers' Association have deposited $5,000 with the Canada Permanent Trust Company, and they hereby challenge the Ontario Referendum Committee to deposit an equal amount with the same Trust Company to prove that beer containing 2.51 per cent. alcohol by weight is intoxicating, or admit that their literature is deceiving the electorate.

Upon the investigation, the losers are to forfeit their deposit to a charity or charities to be named by the Investigating Board. The investigation is to take place before a nominee of the Ontario Referendum Committee, a nominee of the Ontario Brewers' Association, and the third nominee to be agreed on by the two persons so chosen—and if they fail to agree, to be named by the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario.

This Challenge to be answered immediately by the Ontario Referendum Committee.

Long Live The King

By MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

Later in the evening the old king received a present, a rather wilted rose, to which was pinned a card, with "Best wishes from Ferdinand William Otto," printed on it in careful letters.

It was the only flower the king had received during his illness.

When, that night, he fell asleep, it was still clasped in his old hand, and there was a look of grim tenderness on the face on the pillow, turned toward his dead son's picture.

* * * * * *

Troubled times now, with the carnival only a day or two off, and the shop windows gay with banners; with the committee of ten in almost constant session, and Olga Loschek summoned before it, to be told of the passage, and the thing she was to do; with the old king very close to the open door, and Hedwig being fitted for her bridal robe and for somber black at one fitting.

Troubled times, indeed. The city was smoldering, and from some strange source had come a new rumor. Nothing less than that the royalists, headed by the chancellor, despairing of crowning the boy prince, would, on the king's death, make away with him, thus putting Hedwig on the throne—Hedwig, queen of Karnia perhaps already by secret marriage.

The city, which adored the boy, was seething. The rumor had originated with Olga Loschek, who had given it to the committee as a useful weapon. Thus would she have her revenge on those of the palace, and at the same time secure her own safety. Revenge, indeed, for she knew the way of such rumors: how they fly from house to house, street to street, how the innocent, proclaiming their innocence, look even the more guilty.

When she had placed the scheme before the committee of ten, had seen the eagerness with which they grasped it—"in this way," she had said, in her scornful, incisive tones, "the onus of the boy is not on you, but on them. Even those who have no sympathy with your movement will burn at such a rumor. The better the citizen, the more a lover of home and order, the more outraged he will be. Every man in the city with a child of his own will rise against the palace."

"Madame," the leader had said, "you should be of the committee."

But she had ignored the speech contemptuously, and gone on to other things.

Now everything was arranged. Black Humbert had put his niece to work on a carnival dress for the little boy, and had stayed her curiosity by a hint that it was for the American lad.

"They are comfortable tenants," he had said. "Not lavish, perhaps, as rich Americans should be, but orderly, and pleasant. The boy has good manners. It would be well to please him."

So the niece, sewing in the back room, watched Bobby in and out, with pleasant mysteries in her eyes.

Now and then, in the evenings, when the Americans were away, and Bobby was snug in bed, with Tucker on the tiny feather comforter at his feet, the Fraulein would come downstairs and sit in Black Humbert's room. At such times the niece would be sent on an errand, and the two would talk. The niece, who, although she had no lover, was on the lookout for love, suspected a romance of the middle-aged, and smiled in the half darkness of the street: smiled with a touch of malice, as one who has pierced the armor of the fortress, and knows its weakness.

But it was not love that Humbert and the Fraulein talked.

Herman Spier was busy in those days and making plans. Thus, day by day, he dined in the restaurant where the little Marie, now weary of her husband, sat in idle intervals behind the cashier's desk, and watched the grass in the place emerge from its winter hiding place. When she turned her eyes to the room, frequently she encountered those of Herman Spier, pale yet burning, fixed on her. And at last, one day when her husband lay lame with arthritis, she left the desk and paused by Herman's table.

"You come frequently now," she observed. "It is that you like us here, or that you have risen in the shop?"

"I have left the shop," said Herman, staring at her. Flesh, in a moderate amount, suited her well. He liked plump women. They were, if you please, an armful. "And I come to see you."

"Left the shop!" Marie exclaimed. "And Peter Niburg—he has left also? I never see him."

"No," said Herman noncommittally, "He is ill, perhaps?"

"He is dead," said Herman, devouring her with his eyes.

"Dead!" She put a hand to her plump side.

"Aye. Shot as a spy." He took another piece of the excellent pigeon pie. Marie, meantime, lost all her looks, grew pasty white.

"Of the—the terrorists?" she demanded, in a whisper.

"Terrorists! No. Of Karnia. He was no patriot."

So the little Marie went back to her desk, and to her staring out over the place in intervals of business. And what she thought of no one can know. But that night, and thereafter, she was very tender to her spouse, and put cloths soaked in hot turpentine water on his aching thigh.

On the surface things went on as usual at the palace. Karl's visit had been but for a day or two. He had met the council in session, and had had, because of their growing alarm, rather his own way with them.

But although he had pointed to the king's condition and theirs—as an argument for immediate marriage—he failed. The thing would be done, but properly and if good time. Karl left them in a bad temper, well concealed, and had the pleasure of being hissed through the streets.

But he comforted himself with the thought of Hedwig. He had taken her in his arms before he left, and she had made no resistance. She had even, in view of all that was at stake, made a desperate effort to return his kiss, and found herself trembling afterward.

In two weeks he was to return to her, and he whispered that to her.

On the day after the dinner party Otto went to a hospital with Miss Braithwaite. It was the custom of the palace to send the flowers from its spectacular functions to the hospitals, and the crown prince delighted in these errands.

So they went, escorted by the functionaries of the hospital, past the military wards, where soldiers in shabby uniforms sat on benches in the spring sunshine, to the general wards beyond. The crown prince was almost hidden behind the armful he carried. Miss Braithwaite had all she could hold. A convalescent patient, in slippers many sizes too large for him, wheeled the remainder in a barrow, and almost upset the barrow in his excitement.

Through long corridors into wards fresh scrubbed against his arrival, with white counterpanes exactly square, and patients forbidden to move and disturb the geometrical exactness of the beds, went Prince Ferdinand William Otto. At each bed he stopped, selected a flower, and held it out. Some there were who reached out, and took it with a smile. Others lay still, and saw neither boy nor blossom.

"They sleep, highness," the nurse would say.

"But their eyes are open."

"They are very weary, and resting."

In such cases he placed the flower on the pillow, and went on.

One such, however, lying with vacant eyes fixed on the ceiling, turned and glanced at the boy, and into his empty gaze crept a faint intelligence. It was not much. He seemed to question with his eyes. That was all. As the little procession moved on, however, he raised himself on his elbow.

"Who was that?"

The ward, which might have been interested, was busy keeping its covers straight and in following the progress of the party. For the man had not spoken before.

"The crown prince."

The sick man lay back and closed his eyes. Soon he slept. His comrade in the next bed beckoned to a sister.

"He has spoken," he said. "Either he recovers, or—he dies."

But Heckel did not die. He lived to do his part in the coming crisis, to prove that even the great hands of Black Humbert on his throat were not so strong as his own young spirit, lived, indeed, to confront the terrorist as one risen from the dead. But that day he lay and slept, by curious irony the flower from Karl's banquet in a glass of water beside him.

On the day before the carnival, Hedwig had a visitor, none other than the Countess Loschek. Hedwig, all her color gone now, her high spirit crushed, her heart torn into fragments and patently distributed between Nikky, who had most of it, the crown prince, and the old king. Hedwig, having given her permission to come, greeted her politely but without enthusiasm.

"Highness!" said the countess surveying her, "may I speak to you frankly?"

"Please do," Hedwig replied. "Everybody does, anyhow. Especially when it is something disagreeable."

Olga Loschek watched her warily. She knew the family as only the outsider could know it; knew that Hedwig, who would have disclaimed the fact, was like her mother in some things, notably in a disposition to be mild until a certain moment, submissive, even acquiescent, and then suddenly to become, as it were, a royalty and grow cold, haughty. But if Hedwig was driven in those days, so was the countess, desperate and driven to desperate methods.

"I am presuming, highness, on your mother's kindness to me, and your own."

"Well, go on," said Hedwig resignedly. But the next words brought her up in her chair.

"Are you going to allow your life to be ruined?" was what the countess said.

Careful! Hedwig had thrown up her head and looked at her with hostile eyes. But the next moment she had forgotten she was a princess, and the granddaughter to the king, and remembered only that she was a woman, and terror-stricken. She flung out her arms, and then buried her face in them.

"How can I help it?" she said.

"How can you do it?" Olga Loschek countered. "After all, it is you who must do this thing. No one else. It is you they are offering on the altar of their ambition."

"Ambition?"

"Ambition. What else is it? Surely you do not believe these tales they tell—old wives' tales of plot and counterplot!"

"But the chancellor—"

"Certainly the chancellor!" mocked Olga Loschek. "Highness, for years he has had a dream. A great dream. To fulfil his dream to bring prosperity and greatness to the country, and naturally, to him who plans it, there is a price to pay. He would have you pay it."

Hedwig raised her face and searched the other woman's eyes.

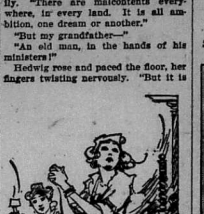

"That is all, then?" she said. "All this other, this fright, this talk of treason and danger, that is not true?"

"Not so true as he would have you believe," replied Olga Loschek steadily. "There are malcontents everywhere, in every land. It is all ambition, one dream or another."

"But my grandfather—"

"An old man, in the hands of his ministers!"

Hedwig rose and paced the floor, her fingers twisting nervously. "But it is too late," she cried at last. "Everything is arranged. I cannot refuse now. They would—I don't know what they would do to me!"

"But It Is Too Late," She Cried.

"Do! To the granddaughter of the king. What can they do?"

That aspect of things, to do her credit, had never occurred to Hedwig. She paused in front of the countess. "What can I do?" she asked pitifully.

"That I dare not presume to say. I came because I felt—I can only say what, in your place, I should do."

"I am afraid." You would not be afraid," Hedwig shivered. "What would you do?"

"If I knew, highness, that some one, for whom I cared, himself cared deeply enough to make my sacrifice, I should demand happiness. I rather think I should lose the world, and gain something like happiness."

"Demand!" Hedwig said hopelessly. "Yes, you would demand it. I cannot demand things. I am always too frightened."

The countess rose. "I am afraid I have done an ubwise thing." she said. "If your mother knew—" She shrugged her shoulders.

"You have only been kind. I have so few who really care."

The countess curtsied, and made for the door. "I must go," she said, "before I go further, highness. My apology is that I saw you unhappy, and that I resented it, because—"

"Yes?"

"Because I considered it unnecessary."

She was a very wise woman. She left then, and let the next step come from Hedwig. It followed, as a matter of record, within the hour, at least four hours sooner than she had anticipated. She was in her boudoir, not reading, not even thinking, but sitting staring ahead, as Minna had seen her do repeatedly in the past weeks. She dared not think, for that matter.

Hedwig's notification that she would visit her, found the countess at leisure and alone. But before the announcement almost immediately, and if she had shown cowardice before, she showed none now. She disregarded the chair Olga Loschek offered, and came to the point with a directness that was like the king's.

"I have come," she said simply, "to find out what to do."

The countess was as direct.

"I cannot tell you what to do, highness. I can only tell you what I would do."

"Very well." Hedwig showed a touch of impatience. This was quibbling, and it annoyed her.

"I should go away, now, with the person I cared about."

"Where would you go?"

"The world is wide, highness."

"Not wide enough to hide in, I am afraid."

"For myself," said the countess, "the problem would not be difficult. I should go to my place in the mountains. An old priest, who knows me well, would perform the marriage. After that they might find me if they hicht. It would be too late."

"This priest—he might be difficult."

"Not to a young couple come to him, perhaps, in peasant costume. They are glad to marry, these fathers. There is much irregularity. I fancy," she added, still with her carefully detached manner, "that a marriage could be easily arranged."

But, before long, she had dropped her pretense of aloofness, and was taking the lead. Hedwig, weary with the struggle, and now trembling with nervousness, put herself in her hands, listening while she planned, agreed eagerly to everything. Something of grim amusement came into Olga Loschek's face after a time. By doing this thing she would lose everything. It would be impossible to conceal her connivance. No one, knowing Hedwig, would for a moment imagine the plan hers. Or Nikky's, either, for that matter.

She, then, would lose everything, even Karl, who was already lost to her. But—and her face grew set and her eyes hard—she would let those plotters in their grisly catacombs do their own filthy work. Her hands would be clean of that. Hence her amusement that at this late day she, Olga Loschek, should be saving her own soul.

So it was arranged, to the last detail. For it must be done at once. Hedwig, a trifle terrified, would have postponed it a day or so, but the countess was insistent. Only she knew how the very hours counted, had them numbered, indeed, and watched them dying by with a sinking heart.

If she gave a fleeting thought to the palace, to the crown prince and his impending fate, she dismissed it quickly. She had no affection for Annunciata, and as to the boy, let them look out for him. Let Mettlich guard his treasure, or lose it to his peril. The passage under the gate was not of her discovery or informing.

CHAPTER XVI.

Nikky and Hedwig.

Nikky had gone back to his lodging, where his servant was packing his things. For Nikky was now of his master's household, and must exchange his shabby old rooms for the cold magnificence of the palace.

He was very downhearted. To the crown prince, each day, he gave the best that was in him, played and rode, invented delightful nonsense to bring the boy's quick laughter, carried pocketfuls of candies, to the secret revolt of his soldierly soul, was boyish and tender, frivolous or thoughtful, as the occasion seemed to warrant.

And always he was watchful, his revolver always ready and in touch, his eyes keen, his body, even when it seemed most relaxed, always tense to spring. For Nikky knew the temper of the people, knew it as did Mathilde gossiping in the market, and even better; knew that a crisis was approaching, and that on this small boy in his charge hung that crisis.

So Nikky trusted in his own right arm and in nothing else. The very size of the palace, its unused rooms, its long and rambling corridors, its rambling wings and ancient turrets, was against its safety.

Since the demonstration against Karl, the riding school hour had been given up. There were no drives in the park. The illness of the king furnished sufficient excuse, but the truth was that the royal family was practically besieged, by it knew not what.

Nikky, summoned to the chancellor's house that morning, had been told the facts, and had stood, rather still and tense, while Mettlich recounted them.

"Our every precautions are our danger," said the chancellor. "And the king—" He stopped and sat, tapping his fingers on the arm of his chair.

"And the king, sir?"

"Almost at the end. A day or two."

Karl, with Hedwig in his thoughts, had returned to mobilize his army not far from the border for the spring maneuvers, and at a meeting of the king's council the matter of a mobilization in Livonia was seriously considered.

Fat Friese favored it, and made an impassioned speech, with sweat thick on his heavy face.

"I am not cowardly," he finished. "I fear nothing for myself or for those belonging to me. But the duty of this council is to preserve the throne for the crown prince, at any cost. And, if we cannot trust the army, in what can we trust?"

"In God," said the chancellor grimly.

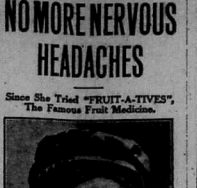

In the end nothing was done. Mobilization might precipitate the crisis and there was always the fear that the army, in parts, was itself disloyal.

The king, meanwhile, lay dying. Doctor Welderman in constant attendance, other physicians coming and going. His apartments were silent. Rugs covered the corridors, that no footfall disturb his quiet hours. The nursing sisters attended him, one by his bedside, one always on her knees at the priedieu in the small room beyond. He wanted little—now and then a sip of water, the cooled juice of fruit. Injections of stimulants, given by Doctor Welderman himself, had scarred his old arms with purplish marks, and grown absorbed more and more slowly as the hours went on.

He rarely slept, but lay inert and not unhappy. Annunciata came, and was at last stricken by conscience to a prayer at his bedside. On one of her last visits that was. She got up to find his eyes fixed on her.

"Father, can you hear me?"

"Yes."

"—I have been a bad daughter to you. I am sorry. It is late now to tell you, but I am sorry. Can I do anything?"

"Otto," he said, with difficulty. "You want to see him?"

"No."

She knew what he meant by that. He would have the boy remember him as he had seen him last.

"You are anxious about him?"

"Very—anxious."

"Listen, father," she said, stooping over him. "I have been hard and cold. Perhaps you will grant that I have had two reasons for it. But I am going to do better. I will take care of him and I will do all I can to make him happy. I promise."

Perhaps it was relief. Perhaps even then the thought of Annunciata's tardy and certain-to-be bungling efforts to make Ferdinand William Otto happy amused him. He smiled faintly.

Nikky received a note from Hedwig late that afternoon. It was very brief:

Tonight at nine o'clock I shall go to the roof beyond Hubert's old rooms. Come for air.

HEDWIG.

Nikky, who in all his incurious young life had never thought of the roof of the palace, save as a necessary shelter from the weather, a thing of tiles and gutters, vastly large, looked rather astounded.

"The roof!" he said, surveying the note. And fell to thinking, such a mixture of rapture and despair as only twenty-three, and hopeless, can know.

Somehow or other he got through the intervening hours, and before nine he was on his way. He had the run of the palace, of course. No one noticed him as he made his way toward the empty suite which so recently had housed its royal visitor.

Hedwig, in a soft white wrap over her dinner gown, was at the balustrade. A very dignified fairy, although her heart thumped disgracefully.

Whatever Nikky had intended—of obeying his promise to the letter, of putting his country before love, and love out of his life—called him instantly. The Nikky, ardent-eyed and tender-armed, who passed the roof and took her almost fiercely in his arms, was all lover—and twenty-three.

"Sweetheart!" he said. "Sweetest heart!"

When, having kissed her, he drew back a little for the sheer joy of again catching her to him, it was Hedwig who held out her arms to him.

"I couldn't bear it," she said simply. "I love you. I had to see you again. Just once."

If he had not entirely lost his head before, he lost it then. He stopped thinking, was content for a time that her arms were about his neck, and his arms about her, holding her close.

"Never let me go, Nikky," she whispered. "Hold me, always."

"Always!" said Nikky, valiantly and cheerily.

"Like this!"

"Like this," said Nikky, who, was, like most lovers, not particularly original. He tightened his strong arms about her.

Then, because she dared not give him time to think, she made her plea—rapid, girlish, rather incoherent, but understandable enough. They would go away together and be married. She had it all planned and some of it arranged. And then they would hide somewhere, and—"and always be together," she finished, tremulous with misery.

And Nikky? His pulses still beating at her nearness, his eyes on her upturned, despairing young face, turned to him for hope and comfort, what could he do? He took her in his arms again and soothed her, while she cried her heart out against his tunic. He said he would do anything to keep her from unhappiness, and that he would die before he let her go to Karl's arms. But if he had stopped thinking before he was thinking hard enough then.

"Tonight?" said Hedwig, raising a tear-stained face. "It is early. If we wait something will happen. I know it. They are so powerful, they can do anything."

He put her away from him at last, after he had kissed her eyelids and her forehead, which was by way of renunciation. And then he folded his arms, which were treacherous and might betray him. After that, not daring to look at her, but with his eyes fixed on the irregular sky-line of the city roofs, he told her many things, of his promise to the king, of the danger, imminent now and very real, of his word of honor not to make love to her, which he had broken.

Hedwig listened, growing cold and still, and drawing away a little. She listened, even assented, as he pleaded against his own heart, treacherous arms still folded. And if she saw his arms and not his eyes, it was because she did not look up.

Halfway through his eager speech, however, she drew her light wrap about her and turned away. Nikky could not believe that she was going like that, without a word. But when she had disappeared through the window, he knew, and followed her. He caught her in Hubert's room, and drew her savagely into his arms.

But it was a passive, quiescent, and trembling Hedwig who submitted, and then, freeing herself, went out through the door into the lights of the corridor. Nikky flung himself, face down, on a shrouded couch and lay there, his face buried in his arms.

Olga Loschek's last hope was gone.

* * * * * *

On the day of the carnival, which was the last day before the beginning of Lent, Prince Ferdinand William Otto wakened early. The palace still slept, and only the street sweepers were about the streets. Prince Ferdinand William Otto sat up in bed and yawned. This was a special day, he knew, but at first he was too drowsy to remember.

Then he knew—the carnival! A delightful day, with the place full of people in strange costumes—peasants, imps, jesters, who cut capers on the grass in the park, little girls in procession, wearing costumes of fairies with gauze wings, students of days parraded and blew noisy horns, even horses decorated, and now and then a dog dressed as a dancer or a soldier.

He yawned again, and began to feel hungry. He decided to get up and take his own bath. There was nothing like getting a good start for a gala day. And, since with the crown prince to decide was to do, which is not always a royal trait, he took his own bath, being very particular about his ears, and not at all particular about the rest of him. Then, no Oskar having yet appeared with fresh garments, he ducked back into bed again, quite bare as to his small body, and snuggled down in the sheets.

Lying there, he planned the day. There were to be no lessons except fencing, which could hardly be called a lesson at all, and as he now knew the "Gettysburg address," he meant to ask permission to recite it to his grandfather. To be quite sure of it, he repeated it to himself as he lay there:

"Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal."

Late in the morning Nikky took him to the roof. "We won't go out, old man," Nikky said to him, rather startled to discover the unhappiness in the boy's face, "but I've found a place where we can see more than we can here. I suppose we try it."

"Why can't we go out? I've always gone before."

"Well," Nikky temporized, "they've made a rule. They make a good many rules, you know. But they said nothing about the roof."

"The roof!"

"The roof. The thing that covers us and keeps out the weather. The roof, highness." Nikky alternated between formality and the other extreme with the boy.

"Flu" Helps Wig-makers.

Wig-makers of Toronto have trebled their business since October.

The supply of human hair has been hardly sufficient to meet the added demands of the trade, they say.

Influenza is given as the reason for the tremendous increase in wig making. Thousands of persons who were attacked with this disease have visited the city's wig-makers carrying the hirsute adornment of happier days and beseeching the experts to turn them out something like it. In the way of a toupe before their friends began to make personal remarks about their resemblance to a hard boiled egg.

"The loss of hair has been appalling," said a wig-maker. "The worst of it is that many persons whose hair had fallen out could not use it again. It was lacking in elasticity and life."

Wig-makers declare the estimate the poundage of false hair that is daily paraded on the streets of a large city.

No Part Nigger.

"That picturesque old gentleman sitting there under the tree must be at least an octogenarian," commented the motorist who had stopped for a drink of water in a village. "Say, looky yur!" truculently returned the villager addressed, "You're talking about my Uncle Rip! He's eighty-two years old and can't take up for nothing, but he want you to understand, by thunder, that he ain't no part nigger!"

Can Withdraw Metals from Blood.

An English scientist claims to have perfected a method whereby metals that have been absorbed by human blood can be withdrawn by electrolysis.

HOW YOU CAN TELL GENUINE ASPIRIN

Only Tablets with "Bayer Cross" are Aspirin—No others!

BAYER

If you don't see the "Bayer Cross" on the tablets, refuse them—they are not Aspirin at all.

There is only one Aspirin, that marked with the "Bayer Cross"—all other tablets are only acid imitations.

Look for the "Bayer Cross"! Then it is real Aspirin, for which there is no substitute.

Aspirin is not German but is made in Canada by Canadians, and is owned by a Canadian Company, all rights being purchased from the U. S. Government.

Genuine "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" have been proved safe by millions for Pain, Headache, Neuralgia, Colds, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Neuritis.

Handy tin boxes of 12 tablets—also larger "Bayer" packages, can be had at any drug store.

Aspirin is the trade mark (registered in Canada), of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid.

THE PEOPLE IN MARS.

Canadian Scientists Are Sceptical About Signalling Them.

"Breakfasting in Mars," may be a popular summer pastime for the Canadian generation of 1950.

Prof. Davis Todd, of Amherst College,, is planning to ascend at Fort Omaha in an American army balloon, in a serious attempt to communicate with the fiery planet by some sort of wireless instruments that he has been perfecting for a number of years. In the report the professor is credited with the statement that he believes that his attempt will be successful, if he can reach a height of 30,000 feet. Six year ago, with Capt. Stevens as his pilot, he attained 22,000 feet.

Sir Frederick Stupart, of Toronto, thinks that Mars may be inhabited, but he is credulous about our communicating with them. "In the first place I question whether Prof. Todd ever said quite what is attributed to him," he said in an interview. "I don't imagine that we'll be communicating with Mars in the near future. I don't think I have ever met Prof. Todd, but he's one of the well-known American astronomers. I can't conceive that he will get to the height, and, if he does what is he, a poor mortal that has to use oxygen to breathe at their height, going to do with ether waves? How do we know that the people in Mars, if there are people there, as are advanced as far as we are in natural science?"

Prof. Chat, of Toronto University, who has been interested in Mars also for many years, stated that he knows Prof. Todd. "He's a little sensational," he said. "I can't go as far as he does. I acknowledge the existence of some markings, practically the same as Prof. Lowell discovered and photographed, but I think their conclusions are based on insufficient data." Prof. Chant looked up his tables to see just how far Mars was away from the earth at the present time. "Just 232,000,000 miles," he said. But every two years and two months, it is only about 35,500,000 or 36,000,000 away. Like Frederick Stupart, he is sceptical of any communication with the Martians.

He gave his opinion of Marconi's announcement a little while ago, that he had had odd effects in his instruments that might have been messages from Mars, as "a little wild." "It is a little harsh to condemn these things, but that proposition of Marconi's looks to me like a wild dream," said Prof. Chant. "Marconi believes that, just as we receive other waves (light) from the stars so should the Martians receive our long ether waves from us. One must remember, though, that the radiation would be out into space, while now, after all is said the wireless messages that we send are for only a few thousand miles, and the energy is guided by the surface of the earth. Marconi proposes to send a message like this —(pause)—(longer pause)—, meaning, "two and two are four," but suppose the Martians do not understand —and why should they?"

Marconi's scheme is insignificant from the picturesque point of view when compared with that of James G. Thompson, an American engineer, based on the investigations of the French scientists, Prof. Etchegoyen, in the Sahara desert. Thompson's scheme is nothing less than to construct a huge triangular diagram on the desert of Sahara large enough for the Martians to see. This he would do by three great canals, with their angular points at Sfax, on the Tunisian Gulf, at Ell Abbas, in the heart of the desert, and at Nenous, not far east of the Southern Coast of Africa from Gibraltar, where it would be connected with the Mediterranean Sea. The hypotenuse of this mighty triangle would stretch for a thousand miles from Ell Abbas to Sfax. He goes further, and suggests that the triangle should be generated on the canals. The Martians, who are great mathematicians, would recognize the 42nd proposition of Euclid, and communicate in its terms.

CANADA'S LARGEST ENGINEERING PROJECT

Hydro-Electric Power Commission Carrying on Wonderful Power Development Work at Niagara Falls—A Second Panama Canal

Operating the largest shovels in the world, and reversing the flow of a river, the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario is carrying on an enormous engineering project at Niagara Falls, practically without the use of steam.

There are many startling phases to this work, which is the largest engineering feat attempted in the Dominion of Canada, and the biggest engineering job at present being carried on in the North American continent.

In order to get water to the new power house which will be erected just above Queenston, the Commission will utilize four and a quarter miles of the Welland River, causing this sluggish stream to flow backward and to take water from the Niagara River instead of emptying into it above the Falls. Connecting with the Welland River is a power canal, stretching from Queenston and encircling the city of Niagara Falls, Ont., which will be eight and a quarter miles long when completed.

The original survey for the Niagara development was made in 1914, and the construction work begun in May, 1917. The commission expects to have the new plant in working order in 1922. War conditions handicapped the engineers, but this year's operations were begun on a gigantic scale. A trip over the right of way will impress the observer with the vast scope of the undertaking which, in its completed state, will cost approximately $27,000,000.00.

Two miles above the brink of Niagara Falls a steam dredge is gnawing away at the channel of the Welland River, removing in generous chunks the river bottom and a portion of Hog Island, which guards the entrance to this historic creek. The lone dredge and its attendant tugs are the only pieces of equipment engaged on the entire Niagara development which are not owned by the Hydro-Electric Power Commission. They, with six or seven switch engines, are the only apparatus in use on the development which require steam in their operation.

Even the drills employed on the rock deposits of the canal right of way are operated by air, electrically compressed. A mile or two inland a huge clamshell swung from an aerial cableway, drops into the river and then emerges, bringing with it generous bites from the river bottom, which are deposited on the river bank at the foot of the tower from where the operator directs the activities of the clamshell. Deposits of earth and clay along the north bank of the river reveal the effectiveness of the clamshell in this particular portion of the development.

A short ride from Niagara Falls over new roadways built by the commission from crushed limestone removed from its right of way, brings one to the canal proper, where the activities of huge electric shovels, electric trains and gangs of men present a striking picture. The weary householder painfully feeding the furnace, shovel by shovel, from the ton or two of coal, his winter's supply, will marvel at the enormity of the electric shovels which pick up from eight to ten tons of material, lift it 70 feet into the air and deposit it into waiting cars, all within the short space of 40 seconds.

Trains, hauled by electric locomotives, convey the mud and clay to the dump at St. David's. The boulders and rock from the canal are borne away to the stone crusher on the cliff above Queenston, and converted into material for roadways, railroad roadbed and riprap which will line the shores of the canal.

ELECTRIC TRAIN BEING LOADED

THE GIANT DIPPER DREDGING THE WELLAND RIVER

The stone crusher, which has a capacity of 4,000 cubic yards, is well worth a visit. The rocks from the excavations are cast into a trough opening into gigantic steel jaws which grind and munch, breaking the largest pieces into smaller bits that are carried away on a belt conveyor. A series of crushers reduce the rocks to a form where they may be utilized for building purposes and stored for future use.

Fifty-five miles of railway, all electrified, and tapping five trunk lines, are required in the construction work on the development. On this railway the commission has in operation more electric locomotives than any railway system in Canada. At pre[illegible],000 men are employed on th[illegible]. These men are housed a[illegible] the commission. A surgeon, [illegible] hospital maintained by the commission are at the disposal of the employees in case of accident. The adoption of the newest safety devices has minimized the danger of accident on the development, and the commission has devoted a great deal of time to safety first propaganda in order to safeguard the men in its employ. About 2,500 acres, or 50 per cent. of the lands acquired by the commission for its right of way, have been converted into farms, and the produce from the farms is sold to the employees of the commission. The commission maintains its own telephone system on the development, and it has connections throughout the province. Garages, machine shops and office buildings line the right of way.

By establishing its power house at Queenston the Hydro-Electric Power Commission is enabled to take advantage of the full drop of both Niagara Falls and the Gorge, a total drop of 305 feet, affording 100 per cent. more electric power from the same amount of water. The largest electric units in the world, 55,000 horsepower generators, will be installed in the power house, to produce electrical energy for distribution throughout the Province of Ontario.

This great work is a striking example of the big vision and initiative of Sir Adam Beck, under whose direction the commission carries on its functions. This work is one which gives the people of Ontario just cause for pride in achievement.

Irish Writer Declares That the English People Are Becoming Talkative

THERE have been many indications that the war has changed more than the political boundaries of Europe; with them, one dares to hope, the "wicked hearts of men" with which Ulysses claimed an extensive acquaintance. The matter of hearts must be left to the future, but certain it is that changes seem to have occurred in the characteristics of certain nations, or at least that our conceptions of them need revision. "A Frenchman must always be talking whether he knows anything of the matter or not; an Englishman is content to say nothing when he has nothing to say," was the characteristically sweeping distinction made by Dr. Johnson; but the volatile Frenchman of fiction has been revealed as the imperturbable poilu; and it has long been whispered that even the taciturn Englishman has been betrayed by the experiences of war into an unwonted loquacity.

The general impression is fortified by the verdict of a genuine authority. For what better authority could one ask on the habits of the English than a witty Irishman? Mr. St. John Ervine confesses, in a recent article on "The Changing Englishman," that he is "very fond of discoursing on the English people, particularly in an adverse manner, in the presence of English people"—a characteristic, be it remarked, which he shares with many of his race. And not only do his conclusions bear out the prevailing conviction, but by the very fact that it is an Irishman who draws these conclusions a new twist is given to the whole discussion. For, mark the implications in Mr. Ervine's title alone. The Englishman is changing. The idea opens up an inviting field of speculation. One might inquire, for instance, whether the change would be one-sided only, whether with the upward progress of the Englishman there might not go a corresponding decline of the Irishman, until the positions were reversed and the Englishman was discovered appealing to heaven and the United States Senate to consider what Ireland had done to England. Indeed, some such reversal of roles is foreshadowed by Mr. Ervine himself, who tells of an unfortunate contretemps that happened to Mr. Chavasse, an Englishman, "who walks about Ireland in a Gaelic kilt and refuses to speak in any other but the ancient Irish language—to the great embarrassment of the Irish people. An Irish policeman," continues Mr. Irvine, "was so nonplussed by Mr. Chavasse's language on one occasion that he mistook him for a German spy and clapped him into jail—to the intense indignation of the Gaelic League, who strongly protested against this brutal outrage on a Gaelic-speaking Englishman by a hulking English-speaking Irishman!" So it seems that merely a change of heart and habits will not avail to keep an Englishman out of trouble in Ireland, not even if he who, in Emerson's phrase, "of all men stands firmest in his shoes" attempts to substitute for his ordinary footwear a pair of Irish brogues.

Mr. Ervine himself applies the sure and certain test — the Englishman travelling. In pre-war days Englishmen "wasted a great deal of eternity in walking up and down railway platforms looking for empty carriages," and when they found one, triple brass must be the armor of the traveler who evinced a desire to disturb their privacy. Whether it is the sociability of common danger or only the shortage of rolling stock, certain it is that the Englishman since the war has perforce acquired the habit of traveling more like a sardine than a lonely autocrat, and, making the best of a bad job, he has fallen into the habit of conversing with his neighbors. In fact, the Englishman, since the war, "has found his tongue, just as many Frenchmen, since the war, have lost theirs." And this loosening of the tongue, Mr. Ervine finds, goes much further than mere casual conversation in railroad carriages. This is borne out by the recent observations of Mr. E. V. Lucas. The Englishman has become not only loquacious but introspective. He will tell you all about his sensations under fire, almost like a character in a novel by Dostoievsky. If any one doubts this, concludes Mr. Ervine, 'let him consider 'The Grand Fleet,' by Lord Jellicoe, and '1914,' by Lord French —and explain them away if he can."

A Message for Canada.

The Right Hon. David Lloyd George, Prime Minister of Great Britain, sent the following message to Sir Robert Borden, by the R34, the letter being mailed after the safe landing of the dirigible at Mineola:

"Dear Sir Robert Borden—

"Our airmen, who during the course of the war earned undying glory, are now adding to their laurels the record of wondrous achievements in time of peace. I am glad to have the opportunity of sending by them a message of cordial greeting to you, and to our kinsfolk in Canada. I need not say how much we in this country welcome every additional instrument for still further strengthening the bonds of sympathy and understanding between the Dominion of Canada and the Motherland, which have been forged in the heat of war.

Ever sincerely,

(Signed) "D. Lloyd George."

A Difficult Question.

One day I was getting dinner in my tent and the usual company of natives watching the performance, when there came along a couple of men who had just landed and who, evidently, had never seen an Eskimo before. I overheard their conversation, relates Rev. S. Hall Young in his book, "Adventures In Alaska." "Say, Jim," said one, "just look there. Did you ever see the like?" (A pause.) "Say, do you think them things has souls?" "We-e-ll," drawled Jim, "I reckon they must have. They're human bein's. But I'll tell you this: If they do, they've all got to go to heaven, sure; for the devil'd never have them around."

Nature and the Indian

The Indian never liked work but he wanted his squaw to get well as soon as possible so that she could do the work and let him hunt, therefore he dug papoose root for her, for that was their great remedy for female weaknesses.

Dr. Pierce uses the same root—called Blue Cohosh—in his "Favorite Prescription" skillfully combined with other agents that make it more effective.

Women who are worn out, who suffer from pain at regular or irregular intervals, who are nervous or dizzy at times, should take that reliable, temperance, herbal tonic which a doctor in active practice prescribed many years ago. Now sold by druggists, in tablets and liquid, as Dr Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

Send 10c. to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., for trial package.

WOODSTOCK, ONT.—"I cannot say enough in praise of Dr. Pierce's Medicines. I had nervous prostration and was completely 'down and out.' I was so bad the doctors considered mine a hopeless case. I was much discouraged and was ready to give up when I began taking the 'Favorite Prescription' and the 'Golden Medical Discovery.' These medicines put me on my feet again and gave me the only real relief. Being a nurse I have recommended Dr. Pierce's Medicines to many, especially the 'Favorite Prescription.' I know of many a young mother to whom I have recommended 'Favorite Prescription' that has been wonderfully helped.

"I am glad to lend my name in connection with Dr. Pierce's Medicines, knowing how good they are."—MRS. A. L. MILLER, 815 John Street.

"Bars" To Be Awarded.

Canadian soldiers will be awarded bars to the general service medal for the following engagements:

1915—Second battle of Ypres, April and May; St. Julien and Langemarck.

1916—Mount St. Eloi, April 3 to 19; Sanctuary Wood, and Hill 2, June 2 and 3; the battle of the Somme, October and November.

1917—Vimy Ridge, April 9 to 13; battle of Arleux and Fresnoy, April 28-29, and May 3; Hill 70, August 15; and Passchendaele, October 25 to November 10.

1918—Battle of Amiens, August 12; capture of Monchy-le-Preux, August 25 to 28; Boiry and Cherisy, August 30 to September 2; breaking of Queant-Drocourt Line, September 3 and 4; Crossing of Canal Du Nord and Capture of Boulon Wood, September 27 to 29; capture of Cambrai, October 19; capture of Deain, October 20; capture of Valenciennes, October 25 to November 2; and the capture of Mons, November 7 to 11.

It is possible that bars will be given also for the battles of Festubert, Givenchy and Hooge.

Thought It an Imitation.

A little Hebrew from the Toronto Ward was listening with open mouth to a Scottishman from Glasgow, who was livening things up a bit in the Salvation Army hut just back of the lines. One of the Tommies asked him the reason for the expression of awe on his countenance. "What's the matter, Abey, didn't you get the joke?" he was asked. "I don't know nottin' about no joke," was the answer, "but how that guy can imitate Harry Lauder!"

Ford

"A Joan of Arc Machine"

"SHE withstood everything in the field and above all was, and still is, the last and only car to survive until the cessation of hostilities"—Extract from letter received by Ford Motor Company from a British Soldier, in Africa.

Over shell-torn roads, through water soaked fields, second only to the tanks in its power to climb debris and crater holes, the Ford car made a world famous record in the fighting area of the great war. In press despatches, in field reports, in letters, in rhyme and song the praises of the Ford were sounded.

In France	-	700 cars out of 1,000 were Fords
In Italy	-	850 cars out of 1,000 were Fords
In Egypt	-	996 cars out of 1,000 were Fords
In Mesopotamia		999 cars out of 1,000 were Fords

The Ford power plant that established this world-wide record in every theatre of the war remains the same. It will be in the Ford you buy.

Ford Runabout $660. Touring $690. On Open models the Electric Starting and Lighting Equipment is $100 extra.

Coupe $975. Sedan $1,175 (closed model prices include Electric Starting and Lighting Equipment). Demountable rims, tire carrier, and non-skid tires on rear as optional equipment on closed cars only at $25 extra. These prices are f. o. b. Ford, Ont., and do not include War Tax.

A GREAT CANADIAN.

Dr. Crozier Has a Place In Intellectual Aristocracy.

Dr. John Beattie Crozier is a Canadian who has won his way by unaided merit to the highest ranks of Britain's intellectual aristocracy. On April 23, his seventieth birthday, he received a letter expressing warm appreciation of his "eminent services to British scholarship and speculation," and his "unselfish endeavors for human welfare," signed by Lord Morley, O.M., Lord Bryce, O.M., Mr. Frederic Harrison, Prof. Sir William Osler, Bt., Lieut.-Col. Sir Francis Younghusband, Mr. St. Leo Strachey, Dr. W. L. Courtney, Mr. H. W. Massingham, Mr. T. P. O'Connor, M.P., Dr. John Clifford, Mr. J. L. Garvin, Mr. J. A. Hobson, Mr. Arthur Sherwell, Mr. James F. Muirhead, Mr. G. P. Gooch, and Mr. Bailey Saunders. These are the names of leading public men, writers, physicians, scientists, editors, historians, social workers, and political economists. Few men have had so significant a tribute paid them in their lifetime as this spontaneous testimonial by Dr. Crozier's contemporaries.

Dr. Crozier was born in Galt in 1849, and graduated in medicine from the University of Toronto in 1872 as a double medalist. He went to England in the same year to begin his career. His books were produced by immense industry, in the hours spared from the practice of his profession. His monumental work, "History of Intellectual Development on the Lines of Modern Evolution," begun in 1897 and completed in 1904, won him official recognition in the form of a pension from the civil list, which enabled him to devote more time to his literary labors. The titles of his volumes—"The Religion of the Future," "Civilization and Progress," "Lord Randolph Churchill: A Study of English Democracy," "My Own Life," "The Wheel of Wealth," "First Principles of Investment," and "Sociology as Applied to Practical Politics," show the versatility of his interests and the range of his research. He has recently lost his wife and his only son, the latter killed in the war. "I sit here desolate," he writes a Canadian friend, "except for kind friends who come in relays every afternoon to see me and talk." But he can look back upon a life of distinguished achievement, crowned by the praise of his fellow-workers.

Dr. Crozier tells a Canadian correspondent that he left Canada because "at that time our Canadians would have nothing but the imprimatur of London and the English—no colonial at any price!" Have Canadians altogether outlived this reproach? Is it not true to-day that they are reluctant to recognize or encourage native merit until it comes back with the hall-mark of London or New York? The number of Canadians of talent who have found it necessary to leave the country to find a field is not flattering to national pride.

Addressing the Prince.

It is officially announced that addresses for presentation to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales during his visit to Canada, should begin as follows:

"To His Royal Highness Edward Albert Christian George Andrew Patrick David, Prince of Wales and Earl of Chester, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom; Duke of Cornwall, in the Peerage of England; Duke of Rothesay, Earl of Carrick and Baron of Renfrew, in the Peerage of Scotland; Lord of the Isles and Great Steward of Scotland; K.G., G.M.M.G., M.C., etc., etc.,

"May it please Your Royal Highness."

Addresses should end as follows:

"We have the honor to be, Sir,

"Your Royal Highness' most obedient servants."

Booze Costs Years of Life

Insurance Records Prove Moderate Drinking Increases Death-rate 35%

LIFE Insurance figures prove that the excess of deaths among moderate drinkers over abstainers runs from 11% to 74%. It is the business of Life Insurance Companies to know the risks a man takes when he uses liquor. These Insurance men have no theories to prove and no doctrine to preach. Their figures are as cold as ice, and they make you pay for the risks you run. To them it is simply business—a matter of dollars and cents. But to you it is a matter of life and death.

Actuarial Comparison of Death Records

Ages	Total Abstainers	Moderate Drinkers	Excess Deaths Among Moderate Drinkers
20-30	4,221	4,617	11%
30-40	4,201	7,041	68%
40-50	6,246	10,861	74%
50-60	13,056	18,524	42%
60-70	29,078	34,568	19%

From tables prepared by R. H. Moore, Actuary of the United Kingdom Temperance and General Insurance Company, based on Records of over 60 years' experience.

Are You Willing to Die Before Your Time for Sake of Booze?

THE number of deaths among moderate drinkers averages 35% higher than among abstainers.

If you have habitually taken two glasses of whiskey per day or the alcoholic equivalent in beer, your chances of dying before your time are double those of total abstainers.

It has been costing total abstainers yearly millions of dollars in premiums to help to pay for excessive deaths among drinkers! Can we afford such waste of life and money in the face of the war losses of money and men?

The Union Government has passed at least one order-in-council that will meet with public approval; it has set aside October 9th as a fire prevention day throughout Canada. The need of calling public attention to the colossal fire waste in this country is admitted on all sides.

Mr. W. G. Wilson, Secretary of the Lennox & Addington Branch of the Canadian Patriotic Fund informs us that from 1st March, 1916, to 30 June, 1919, the Branch remitted to head office of the fund $64,300 and received back for relief purposes $51,844.68, and in that period paid out latter amount to mothers, wives, and other dependant relatives of soldiers—in all 208 families. In addition there was paid out in said time on insurances of soldiers lives, $14,536.35. The old U. E. L. County has certainly done its "bit" in the war in money as well as in men.
